Walgett's Dharriwaa Elders Group appeals the deferral of new land clearing laws

The Dharriwaa Elders Group ("DEG") writes to express great concern for the introduction of the Biodiversity Conservation Act on 24 August 2017, before the Native Vegetation Regulatory Map and other accompanying regulations that define where and how clearing can occur have been completed, and endorsed by scientists¹. If the Act proceeds next week you will be allowing farmers to self-interpret what is regulated and unregulated land. Farmers can't be prosecuted if they clear by "accident" and exploit this loophole as fast as they can before proper controls are put in place. We have decided we cannot let this happen without appealing to you directly to intervene.

We live in Walgett and witness and suffer from the lack of monitoring for compliance of environment, water and NSW National Parks and Wildlife legislation. We understand from the media that the ICAC and other bodies are investigating water theft from the rivers that supply our community's lifeblood. Yet you could be acting next week to allow the same and other farmers expand their cultivation areas, remove all clumps of trees and single trees in paddocks and enable the clearing of high value woodland for new cultivation land by replanting degraded cropping land. You could be ignoring the protection of koala habitat and big mature trees that are a home to many hollow-dependent species including threatened species in our region. You could be condoning farmers in our region to destroy the last remaining network of remnant native vegetation on private lands, because you have allowed this process to be rushed and have ignored warnings from reputable scientists. It seems that all endangered ecological communities are fair game.

Many properties surrounding Walgett are overcleared already. This overclearing must be investigated and the environment compensated. Environmental scientists who know our region must be engaged by an independent investigation of existing and past environmental breaches and to undertake an independent review of the regulations, which must be changed according to their recommendations.

Since the DEG began in 1999 we have been working to protect the Aboriginal Cultural Values of the Walgett area and this includes biodiversity. If you do not answer our appeal, you will be winding back the clock and ruining much hard work undertaken by our volunteers. You will be contributing to the trauma suffered daily by our community. We know that wellbeing of Aboriginal communities is affected by access to a healthy country. This is well-documented. You must also be well aware of the importance of biodiversity to the NSW economy. Please do not let this new legislation be enacted before proper consideration and planning has been undertaken.

If you do, many hectares of native vegetation will be cleared before the next election. Many birds and animals will disappear from our region. This damage will require large public funds to try and repair (if in fact repair is possible). The short-term greed of a handful of farmers must not be subsidized by public funds while the health of our environment, and therefore our health, is risked.

Why has our submission and those of many highly respected scientists to the Biodiversity Reforms – Have Your Say in June 2016, been ignored?

We appeal that you do not allow the values that make our area unique, special and increasingly visited by tourists thereby contributing employment and economic activity to our disadvantaged town, be jeopardized.

We write to appeal you apply your immediate attention to this risk and advise us in Walgett of your actions.

Yours sincerely

Clem Dodd
